High school students learned a job about United Nations

UNITAR held a workshop for high school students to let them understand the activities of United Nations. Twenty-one students participated in this event. UNITAR staff gave them a mini quiz which is related to the seventeen sustainable development goals such as reduction of poverty and economic empowerment for women. In addition to this, they explained how they organize trainings for human resource development in peace building using the example of excursion at A-bomb dorm and peace memorial park. One of the participants said that she was admired what she could know through the event.
